

Re-Authoring the World Workshops in South Africa

Re-authoring narratives we want more of

Discover and learn how we can nurture and enrich stories that we value so that it can have a more important place in our individual and organisational lives

What is it about? Individually and organisationally our lives are filled with moments that spark our imaginations of a different future. Sometimes we wish these significant moments can play a larger role in our lives. In our two days together, we will explore the following:

- Discover practices that uncover alternative moments and outcomes
- Discover and learn how individuals and communities can cultivate narratives that take them forward
- How do we weave alternative moments through embodiment and rituals into our communal and individual lives?
- What is the relationship and impact of alternative narratives on the context
- Discover the narratives of our imagined futures

Where? Pretoria @ 233 Kandelaar Avenue, La Montagne.

The cost: R2000 per workshop that includes a copy of the Re-authoring the World book, a light lunch, tea/coffee and snacks

Who should attend? Re-authoring workshops come alongside all who fulfil an individual- or team role within their organisations, institutions or communities such as: leaders, managers, HR and OD practitioners, coaching professionals, educators, social workers, facilitators of group-work, activists and healthcare professionals.

How will we learn? The workshop is one in a series of six workshops that can be attended as a whole or separately. These workshops address the most important themes of re-authoring ideas and practices over a 7-month period. The workshops are designed to be stand-alone experiences of learning so that participants can enter the journey at any point without feeling excluded.

If you are interested in integrating the re-authoring ideas and practices into your life and work, you can also take part in an apprentice journey that will run simultaneously to the workshop mentioned above.
